together on many occasions at the Cafe Royal in Regent street, at the Bristol Hotel and elsewhere. On one occasion he saw them leave the Café Royal together at 11:30 p.m. and drive to the Hotel Mandarin, where they remained until 2:30 a.m.

On his cross-examination the witness said that he had destroyed his original notebook containing a memorandum of the occurrence because there were other cases in it.

Justice Hannan told the jury that the report produced was no corroborative of the evidence, but that the court would have been held in greater doubt if it had been otherwise.

Lord Clancarty, Viscount Dunlo's father, then went into the witness box. He swore that he had first heard of his son's marriage on July 16th, and that he at once insisted on his son's going to Australia. He had ordered inquiries to be made regarding Lady Dunlo's habits and movements, and denied that he had promised to pay his son's debts, or that he had asked him to sign a petition for divorce against his wife. He added that he had never had an interview with Lady Dunlo, although she had sailed for one.

LONDON, 26th July.

Mr. Gill, counsel for Wertheimer, co-respondent in the Dunlo divorce case, delivered a vigorous address to the jury that afternoon.

Lady Dunlo entered the witness box looking rather pale. She related the detail of a long and searching examination splendidly. She detailed the history of her relations with Weston, the father of her child, and solemnly declared that she had never been Wertheimer's mistress. After her marriage she begged Lord Dunlo to take her to Australia, as he promised her he would, but he refused to do so, and allowed her to remain in England with her husband. If he remained in England, his father would have nothing to do with him. Dunlo left immediately. Lady Dunlo said she never loved Wertheimer, who she asserted adored her.

Lady Dunlo and her sister upon leaving the courtroom were followed through the streets by a crowd. One of the documents laid before Justice Hannan was a letter from Lord Alfred Osborne, who took that method of denouncing his son's wife, and she would not allow him to kiss her hand when he left her. If he remained in England, his father would have nothing to do with him. Dunlo left immediately. Lady Dunlo said she never loved Wertheimer, who she asserted adored her.

LONDON, 26th July.

In continuation of Lady Dunlo's evidence to the jury she denied plain under several cross-examinations that she had ever been Wertheimer's mistress. She admitted that Wertheimer had designated her husband as a brazen lordling. She was much hurt at his remarks and wopt, but subsequently forgave him.

Acked by Sir Charles Russell whether Wertheimer's utterances concerning her husband were true, she said that she did not know of the remarks and did not endorse them.

Lady Dunlo then left the stand and Isidor Wertheimer, the co-respondent, was called. His presence created a decided sensation in the courtroom. He is a dashing young man of about 26, with a strong Hebrew cast of features. His story was pretty much a repetition of I. M. Dulio's, but he gave some additional details mainly upon the fact that he went to a certain shop to buy baby linen. He wanted to America for various reasons, one of them being in consequence of a quarrel he had with his father and his uncle concerning a number of presents he had given to Lady Dunlo since her marriage. They consisted of horses, carriages, diamonds and other presents. He had no money, but had paid 100 pounds of rent into the house for his wife before he went to America. He admitted his father had reproached him for it, and that he had said to him: "I hear you are spending a great deal of money on this woman. If you are not getting anything for it you are a fool. If you are getting something for it you are a blackguard." Wertheimer then broke down, and said he had repented his ways, and named before his marriage he had never done so since. He was stony denied that their friendship had ever been other than platonic and stated that he would have gladly married her at any time, but he was sorry to say that she wouldn't have him. "Admiration doesn't fully describe my feelings for her," he said with fervor when he started a little speech from the witness box. "I have now seen that it was wrong for him to have come about with Lady Dunlo as freely as he did, but she knew that he would never insult her, which was more than could be said of some of Lord Dunlo's friends and relatives.

Some medical evidence was then called to prove that it was practically impossible that Lady Dunlo could have been Wertheimer's mistress during the period of his marriage.

Lord Dunlo was then recalled, and he denied the story that he with two others had forced up to see which of them should marry Bitton. The case was then adjourned.

LONDON, 26th July.

The action ended to-day with a verdict for the defendant. When Lady Dunlo made her appearance she was given a hearty round of applause, and the defendant's supporters were treated, and also, because of the sympathy with which the Court adnoveded over Viscount Dunlo's course.

The charge, as a whole, was distinctly favorable to Lady Dunlo in that it amounted almost to instructions for a verdict in her favor, though it is doubtful if the result was in any way affected.

The Court emphasized the dangerous position of an actress, and pointed out that members of the profession could hardly fail to acquire less strict notions as to what constituted proper behaviour, than were expected of women in ordinary walks of life. Conduct which on the part of the latter would be proof positive of loose morals, might among the former be nothing more than a trifling infidelity.

His Honor dwelt with much detail on Lord Dunlo's desertion of his wife. His proper course, he said, was either to live with and support her or obtain a divorce for causes existing at the time of separation. On the contrary, he hypocritically forced her to maintain herself amid all the forms of temptation, and set upon her in the event of her having been married the wrong done to her.

It is stated that she proposes to follow up her victory fully and require the Viscount to maintain her, and, if she can manage it, to live with her.

FRANCE AND THE MCKINLEY PROTECTIVE BILL.

LONDON, 26th July.

M. Rist, Minister of Foreign Affairs, recently issued a circular to the consuls of France from several of the European powers against the McKinley Tariff Bill, but none of them seemed to have much heart in this absurd attempt to interfere with the legislation of a foreign power and the whole affair has fizzled out rather ridiculously.

The Governments of Austria, Belgium, Italy and Holland sent telegrams to M. Rist, expressing their disapprobation of the bill, and the same were forwarded to the French Government, which generally acquiesced in the proposal, making really only an exchange of views on the question and not committing himself to any definite plan.

England immediately and decisively declined to have anything to do with the matter, and the French agreed to enter into the project with these two powers.

The French Government, however, did not agree to the proposal, and seemed quite averse—whether the young couple would probably have been avoided if they had been left to themselves.

Lady Dunlo, who during the trial had always left the court through the rear exit, in order to avoid the crowd, went out by the main entrance after the adjournment of the overture from the Crown, and seemed quite elated over her vindication.

It is stated that she proposes to follow up her victory fully and require the Viscount to maintain her, and, if she can manage it, to live with her.

APPEALS IN GERMANY.

LONDON, 26th July.

It is reported that the Emperor will review Bismarck's published interviews. The Emperor has been asked to do so, and the question of how to silence him, probably occupies the Emperor's mind as much as the critical development in the East. All ideas of adopting legal measures to suppress Bismarck's utterances have, however, been abandoned. The Emperor will return from England on August 6th and pass a week at Potsdam before starting for Russia. He will remain in Germany for a month, and then go to the States, and the French expedition to explore Central Africa, which is being organized by the French in Nubia.

Lord Salisbury, speaking at a dinner given last night at the Hacienda House to Mr. Major's Ministers, said the situation everywhere was pacific. The Anglo-German agreement had removed all cause that might have arisen for quarrel. His Lordship dwelt on the growing prosperity of Egypt, which he said was due to credit with an occasional inspiration by the Emperor, that Russia's policy in the Balkans, and the basis of an expected arrangement, to be made with the Emperor, and that William II, the Emperor of Germany, and the British Emperor, however, may precipitate a revolution and nullify this diplomacy. In view of a possible rupture with Russia, Emperor William during his recent visit to Copenhagen and Christiansburg, revised his proposal for a Scandinavian coalition, including the reabsorption of Finland by Sweden. The Emperor's ultimatum to Finland, however, was not received by the Finns, creating a feeling of intense discontent, which is ripe for a revolt. The Emperor offered King Oscar the price of Sweden's entry in the Dreibund to the prospective restoration of Finland.

Prince Bismarck, giving the Neues Freitag, correspondent's second interview, deplored the menacing aspect of affairs, and said he did not know more than one chief duty to try to do, which was to advise the Emperor to give up his claim to the throne of Europe. "Why," he said, "should Germany continue to regard Russia as an invincible enemy?" At the present moment, he said, absolutely no reason existed for a German war with Russia, and an armistice was to be had today. A grateful farewell address to the Queen of England was adopted.

BERLIN, 22nd July.

Gray King Otto of Berlin has written to all foreign ministers, asking that the Anglo-German agreement relative to territory in Africa be ratified in contact with English policy, in coming in contact with English schemes, caused disagreeable complications.

As negotiations still points did not avail to complete a settlement, it was decided to deal with the matter from a financial point of view.

BERLIN, 23rd July.

A special dispatch from Berlin says that King Wilhelm has written to the Emperor to inform him that he is legally free to marry again, will shortly take in himself as wife a young American lady of great wealth whom he met last winter in Paris. The name of the lady is not given, but the truth of the story is vouchsafed for. The King's affairs are however, in a badly complicated condition in Paris and only a little while ago he was compelled to sell his villa, which he intended to develop into a grand, Milanese pension de luxe. In Paris are said to exceed three million francs, which the wealthy American young lady is expected to pay. It is certain that some soothing influence has been at work to pacify these creditors.
